bassy that the Gromyko letter was going to be made public Wednes-day at about the same time the embassy was phoning reporters.

The explanation provided by the embassy for releasing Mr. Gromyko's letter was that Mr. Haig's message "has been made public by the United States side." The full text of Mr. Haig's letter was not made public, but The New York Times on Jan, 30 did divulge the broad outline of the message.

Stream of Attacks

Officials in Washington speculated that Moscow was irritated by the harsh statements from the Reagan administration about the Soviet Union and wanted to redress the situation. In recent days, there has been a stream of press commentaries from Moscow attacking the new administration. Mr. Gromyko, in his letter, said that the Soviet Union shared a wish expressed by Mr. Haig "to work for development of relations" between the two countries. He said, however, that Mr. Haig's letter did not address the questions which deserve priority attention."

On Poland, he said that the internal affairs of that country "cannot be a subject of discussion between third countries, including the USSR and the USA." He said that if one speaks of

"outside attempts to exert influence" on Poland, then it was necessary to note that such interference was being carried on by the United States and other Western states. Mr. Gromyko charged that the Voice of America and other American controlled radio stations were trying to produce in Poland "unfriendly sentiments with repard to the Soviet Union."

What purpose then is being served by the attempts of the American side to introduce the 'Polish topic' into the Soviet-American dialogue and to make at the same time inappropriate 'warnings' addressed to the Soviet Union?" Mr. Gromyko asked.

New Premier Seen as a 'Polish Gen. Haig'

New York Times Service WARSAW - To the outside world the appointment of the minister of defense, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, as premier may seem to be an ominous step toward militarizing the government and prepar-ing the armed forces for a crackdown on the irrepressible unions and their dissident supporters.

But here — in the eye of the international hurricane rising over the Vistula — the appointment is not viewed in such alarming terms. Poles are less afraid of their own army than Western analysts suspect, and Gen. Jaruzelski is widely seen as a kind of Polish Alexande M. Haig Jr., a strong figure for troubled times.

The man he replaced, Jozef Pinkowski, was deemed well-meaning but uninspiring and intellectually

There is no denying the signifi-cance of the move. Never before has a Communist country in the Soviet bloc given its top-ranking officer the top position in government. Communist parties have tra-ditionally kept the military com-mand to one side, a faithful dog but a leashed dog.

Now, the Polish Communist Party has in effect admitted that it is too weak to rule in its own name and that it must bolster its waning authority by reaching out to the institution of law and order. Gen. Jaruzelski's military responsibilities, it is believed, include direct command of the "internal front." the 85,000 or so troops reserved for defense of the homeland, which includes putting down domestic insurrection.

Among Western analysts, one scenario for disaster in Poland is that a new round of strikes and stoppages would provoke the beleaguered government into declaring martial law and using the army to break up strikes or run essential strike-bound services. This would likely entail conflicts with civilians that could prompt Soviet-led Warsaw Pact intervention.

For this reason, Gen. Jaruzel-ski's appointment, coming after weeks of disruptive labor protests. was read abroad as an ill omen. But Polish observers are more sanguine. They note that a decision to use the military to suppress the unions would be a collegiate decision, made by the 10-member Politburo. Gen. Jaruzelski, who has been a Politburo member since 1971, has argued to keep the army out of the conflict all along.

use the army would be taken and top party leadership came in for severe criticism by other committee members. Many of the attacks upon new restrictions on the press and mass media seemed to be thinly veiled attacks upon Stefan Olszowski, a ranking Polit-buro member who emerged in re-cent weeks as the chief hard-liner. The significance of this is that it shows there are still strong voices on the 140-member committee in favor of Poland's democratic "renewal." They may share the Politburo's concern about anti-Socialist forces within the trade union movement, but they are also aware of the dangers of reneging upon the agreements that ended the strikes last summer. In striking contrast to the mood in Washington and West European capitals, where Gen. Jaruzelski's appointment was generally regarded as the Polish government's last chance to get the situation under control without "fraternal assistance" from neighboring Socialist countries, the mood here is one of tempered optimism.

Many Polish intellectuals, even those who feared Soviet intervention last December, now seem convinced that it will not occur or at aged to come through this far and go through so much without it having happened. "It will not mean a new, abrupt hard line," said one party member.
"But it could have a stabilizing ef-hans because the country has man-fect upon the country." Only now, as the texts of some of the speeches delivered before the closed Central Committee meeting that proposed Gen. Jaruzelski are being printed, has it become clear that the government any more easily or that a hardline advocate of force instead of negotiation is now in the key government position. The same could not be said if "the other general." Mieczyslaw Moczar, the former minister of the interior in the late 1960s who is now back on the Politburo, had been given the post, observers generally agree.

Polish journalists and diplomats believe that Gen. Jaruzelski's appointment, dramatic as it may seem, will not fundamentally alter the government's policy, although it may clarify it. They see its im-portance as largely symbolic: When the Solidarity union leaders next bargain with the administration they will be aware that they are dealing with someone who has the resources of the army at his

A number of Europeans have questioned whether harsh remarks by Mr. Reagan and Mr. Haig toward the Soviet Union can serve a constructive purpose. Some advisers to Mr. Reagan have suggested that the deal creates dangerous West German dependence on Soviet energy supplies. The government of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, however, views the arrangement as a stabilizing policy-maker here said, "It would be a tragedy if the deal became a

The Thomson Organization, which is losing more than $30-million a year on the two newspapers and their three affiliated weekly supplements, announced last fall that they were for sale and that if no buyer had been found by March, they would be closed.

Thus, to many Times employees, and others concerned for the paper, Mr. Murdoch appears now in the role of a savior. "I know that my staff are very pleased at the outcome." said William Rees-Mogg, the editor. "It is very good news for The Times," But there are others who, although gratified that the 195-yearold daily will not die after all, are concerned at the prospect of its being run by Mr. Murdoch.

Symbol of Excellence

For generations, The Times has been a symbol of journalistic excellence, and a pattern for other quality newspapers all over the world. Mr. Murdoch's reputation is at the opposite end of the journalistic spectrum, and many of his papers tend to be dominated by

Because of that contrast, and be cause The Times occupies a unique role in the British society, the prospect of his buying it precipitated an outcry that reached all the way to the floor of the House of Commons. Mr. Murdoch answered the objections by agreeing to what one editor enthusiastically called "a charter of freedom," guaranteeing the editorial independence of the newspapers, and yielding a good deal of power to six public-interest directors on the board of the com-

Their approval will be necessary, for example, in the selection of new editors, or in any subsequent sale of the papers. A test of how the unusual system operates will come soon, since Mr. Rees-Mogg announced several months ago that he planned to retire as ed- cow and take note of the wish exitor soon after a new owner took pressed therein to work for devel-

Mr. Murdoch said that The Times would be produced completely by the cold-type process within 24 weeks, and that the changeover at the Sunday Times would begin thereafter. Under the present agreements, the video display terminals used at the first stage of the new process will still be operated not by journalists but by members of the printers union. This was a concession to the unions, but Mr. Murdoch said that in the end, the journalists will be operating the machines.

Since Mr. Murdoch already owns The Sun and The News of the World, which are the daily and Sunday newspapers with the largest circulation in Britain, his latest acquisition gives him a great concentration of ownership.

His opponents, especially in Parliament, had sought to have the purchase reviewed by the Monopolies Commission, but the government refused, on the grounds that the papers were in imminent danger of going out of business.

Iran Rejects Iraqi Offer for Cease-Fire; Afghanistan Opposes Outside Mediation

By Richard S. Ehrlich

United Press International
NEW DELHI — Iran rejected an Iraqi cease-fire offer Thursday, and Afghanistan for the first time said that it opposed international mediation to end the Afghan war.

The strong statements by the rwo nations were made on the fourth day of a nonaligned foreign ministers conference, which is ex-pected to issue a declaration demanding withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Cambodia — without naming the Soviet Union or Vietnam.

The Iranian minister for executive affairs, Behzad Nabavi, said: 'So long as one single invading soldier remains in Iran, we will never accept a cease-fire or engage

Deng Says Hua Still Chairman of Party

PEKING — Deng Xiaoping, the powerful vice chairman of China's Communist Party, said Thursday that reports that Chairman Hua Guofeng had resigned were un-founded, but that some "changes of personnel" were possible

Meeting with French journalists, China's top leader, said of Mr. Hua: "He was seen not long ago. wasn't he? He is still the chairman of our party."

Mr. Hua has been under criticism and is reported on his way out of China's top job. He was not seen in public for 10 weeks before he was shown on television last week meeting with high-ranking Vietnamese defector Hoang Van

Some reports say Mr. Hua has offered his resignation. But no action is expected until meetings of the party Central Committee or the party congress. Mr. Deng said Thursday that "there may be changes of personnel, which are normal in other countries."

Western diplomatic sources say party Secretary-General Hu Yaobang, who is expected to succeed Mr. Hua, already is handling the day-to-day party affairs. Mr. Hu appeared in Mr. Hua's place at a Central Committee tea party Jan. WASHINGTON - Following is the text of a letter by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., as released Wednesday by the Soviet Embassy in Washington, with a preface by the embassy's information section:

In view of the fact that the contents of the letter of the Secretary of State A. Haig to the USSR Minister of Foreign Affairs A.A. Gro-myko dated Jan. 24, 1981 has been nade public by the U.S. side, here follows the text of the reply letter of A.A. Gromyko to Secretary Haig of Jan. 28, 1981:

Dear Mr. Secretary, I have carefully studied your letter of January 24 transmitted through the U.S. Embassy in Mos-opment of relations between the lease of the detainees. This was Soviet Union and the United also the position we adhered to States. This corresponds to our intentions too.

Indeed, there exist quite a number of questions in the Soviet-American relations, including the ones which deserve priority atten-tion and on which it would be advisable to exchange views. It can only be regretted that such questions, judging by your letter, have not yet fallen within the scope of attention of the new administra-

As to the certain specific questions touched upon in your letter I would like to say the following: Unambiguous Terms

Right after the incident when the U.S. Embassy personnel was seized in Tehran, the Soviet Union in clear and unambiguous terms came out against such type of ac-tions, in favor of the strict observance of the Vienna convention provisions concerning respect for diplomatic immunity and, accordingly, in favor of an immediate re-

This, however, is passed in silence. Neither your letter, nor the public statements of the officials of the administration contain a single kind word addressed to the Soviet Union in connection with the position it adopted. Instead. clearly tendentious assessments are being given to what was reported in the Soviet news media concerning the release of the American diplomats. Moreover, it is being done in such a way as to entirely distort in the eyes of the public opinion the position held by the Soviet state on this matter. One cannot belp asking for what reason all this is being done and whether any thought is being given as to how we should regard such distorted interpretations. Now about Poland. First of all I must say in a totally definite way that the internal affairs of this sovereign Socialist state cannot be a subject of discussion between third countries, including the USSR and the U.S.A. If one is to speak, however, of outside attempts to exert influence on the internal situation in Poland, then it is necessary to state that such attempts do take place and they are being undertaken precisely on the part of the in this respect. Its essence is that U.S.A. and other Western powers. there must be a cessation of the

In this regard it is sufficient to mention at least the provocative and instigatory transmissions of the "Voice of America" and other radio stations under U.S. control, broadcasting to Poland. armed incursions into the territory of the Democratic Republic of Af-ghanistan and of all other interference in its internal affairs, as well as firm guaranties that this will not be resumed. Doing so would also eliminate the reasons that prompted the necessity of introducing into Afghanistan a limited contingent of the Soviet troops requested by the DRA government in accor-dance with the existing norms of international law.

Concrete paths leading to the achievement of a political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan were indicated in the DRA government statement of May 14, 1980. Later, on more than one occasion, the DRA government confirmed its readiness to start working on appropriate agreements between Afghanistan and Pakistan, as well as between Afghanistan and Iran. And it did so again quite recently. The United States, on its part, could, no doubt, contribute to the political settle-ment if it were to facilitate the beginning of the dialogue between Afghanistan and Pakistan and not to attempt, as is the case now, to raise obstacles thereto.

In conclusion, I would like once more to confirm our readiness for exchange of views on a wide range of issues. I hope that subsequently in our exchange of views a proper place will be accorded to the questions on which resolution the prospects of development of both Soviet-American relations and interna-tional situation as a whole are primarily dependent.

Mr. Corterier's reference was to NATO's decision in 1979, now un-der attack from the left wing of his party, to deploy new Cruise and Pershing missiles in Western Eu-rope by the end of 1983. The sec-ond aspect of the decision was for the United States to begin arms reduction talks with the Soviet Union so that the stationing might not have to take place at all.

The promise of negotiations was an important factor in getting the NATO decision approved in mem-ber countries where Social Democratic parties are strong, "With his statements about no talks, and the neutron weapon confusion," Mr. Corterier said, "Mr. Weinberger has made things more difficult than they need be."

The question of the stationing of the NATO missiles in West Our-many has been one of the factors involved in the development of a crisis within the Social Democratic party, pitting Mr. Schmidt's pragmatists against an increasingly vocal group of young, left-wing legisin an effort to resolve the difficulties, the party's national executive board met for seven hours, until early Thursday morning, and produced a five-point paper sup-porting the chancellor's policies. Mr. Schmidt himself acknowledged that the meeting could not eliminate much of the hard feeling, and the document was adopted with five leftists abstaining.

Mr. Schmidt was reported to have angrily shouted — his voice was heard by reporters through several closed doors — at Erhard Eppler, one of the leftists who has been attacking West Germany's in-volvement in the NATO decision.

The seriousness of the party problems was sharply illustrated by the seeming obviousness of the executive board's main statement: The political task of social democracy remains the decisive support of Helmut Schmidt and his

But the paper did not provide clear positions on a number of other sensitive topics within the party. It acknowledged the country's economic problems and asserted that basic changes within the West German industrial strucsary to keep pr ucts competitive, it but dealt only marginally with the notion that the changes would require disruption of old habits.

No emphasis was given to the development of nuclear power to deal with the country's energy problems. Energy saving programs were called the most important steps to be taken, followed by the development of coal. Nuclear energy is to be used "only when the ed for power cannot be covered by other means." The document stressed the importance of the NATO decision on theater nuclear forces and said that the government should urge the United States to hold to factual compliance with the SALT-2 decision on arms reduction.

Neutron Bomb Issue Ignites Reagan's First Foreign Policy Flap

By Robert C. Toth Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON — Despite its emphasis on speaking with one voice, the Reagan administration has been struggling with its first foreign policy flap because of increasingly public disagreement between the departments of State and Defense over what to do about the neutron bomb.

At the center of the flap is Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who this week repeated a statement that caused him problems with the State Department last week. Personally, Mr. Weinberger said, he supports deploying neutron warheads in

The administration has not yet made a decision on the controversial weapon, which is designed to have a large human kill factor while leaving buildings and other structures relatively intact.

The neutron bomb issue is especially sensitive for Washington because the question of its deployment is an emotion-charged, politically controversial matter in Western Europe. Mr. Weinberger's initial statement supporting the neutron bomb came as an unwelcome surprise to allied governments in Eu-

Caution on Debate

Seeking to calm that reaction last week, the State Department said that U.S. policy was unchanged from that of the Carter administration, which decided in 1978 not to deploy the neutron bomb.

Mr. Weinberger's second assertion of support for the neutron weapons created additional problems for the Reagan administration because it was made only days after the president cautioned Cabinet members not to debate in public about issues that had not yet been decided.

At the White House on Wednesday, Karna

Small, a deputy press secretary, initially said — in response to reporters' questions about neutron warheads — that "this situation is under study" and that "we've been in full and extensive consultation with our allies."

Her words seemed to suggest that the administra-tion was seriously asking members of NATO to station the enhanced radiation warheads in Europe. But another press aide, Lyndon Allin, interrupted

"There have been no discussions with the allies specifically on whether or not it the neutron weap-on) should be deployed." Mr. Allin said. "This decision [on making and deploying the weapon] has not been fully considered, fully discussed within the ad-

Asked if Mr. Weinberger had not violated Mr. Reagan's request on public debate, Mr. Allin said the question should be put to Mr. Weinberger, Attempts to reach Mr. Weinberger were unsuccessful. Weinberger has certainly created a problem," a State Department official said. "If he really wants to deploy the warheads, the last thing to do is to raise it first at a press conference."

It was at his first press conference, on Feb. 3, that Mr. Weinberger was asked when a decision would be made on producing enhanced radiation

The neutron warhead, he replied, "is certainly one of the things that we should examine ... I think the opportunity that this weapon gives to strengthening theater nuclear forces is one that we very probably want to make use of. Obviously ... we would certainly want to consult with our ailies and friends ...

The State Department reacted by immediately cabling the text of his comments to capitals abroad, saying that it was normal for an incoming administration to review major decisions by its predecessor. The cable asserted that no decision on the matter had been made, and that any deployment decision would be made only after consultation with NATO

Nevertheless, Mr. Weinberger's remarks created controversy. European newspapers quoted government officials on the Continent as saving that the neutron issue was most since NATO had decided in 1979 to modernize the theater nuclear forces. Some complained that President Reagan's promise that his administration would speak with one voice. unlike the Carter administration, had not survived long. Moscow registered its expected protest.

The matter seemed to have subsided by weekend. But Mr. Weinberger, in a Washington Post interview, repeated his position and re-emphasized that NATO should be consulted.

At the State Department, Mr. Dyess said that "our position remains as stated in the cable" of last week, "We think the European allies understand that the arms polices of this administration are un-der review," he said. "The secretary of state feels strongly on this issue."

Negotiating Powers Demanded

Dayan Reportedly Asks Role With Peres

By William Claiborne

Washington Post Service JERUSALEM — Former foreign minister Moshe Dayan has decided to try to elect a new faction in Israel's parliament and possibly spoil the Labor Party's bid to form a coalition after the June 30 elections unless he is offered a dominant role in the new government, it was learned Thursday.

Informed sources close to Mr.
Dayan said that he is asking for responsibility to negotiate all peace agreements with Arab states and unchallenged authority to administer the affairs of the occupied

West Bank and Gaza Strip They said that the Israeli war hero and diplomat, who abruptly quit the government in October, 1979, in a policy dispute with Prime Minister Menachem Begin, will give Labor Party leader Shimon Peres until the end of March to offer such a position publicly before he decides to enter the elections, possibly on a "national emergency party" ticket founded on centrist principles. Mr. Dayan, the sources said, is prepared to assume either a civilian Cabinet-level position in charge of all Arab affairs, or even to reactivate his commission on the general staff of the Israeli Army in order to handle the administration of the occupied terri-tories for a Labor Party govern-

In either case, the sources said, Mr. Dayan wants "the full authority, on behalf of the Cabinet, for dealing with the Arab problem, not only here but in negotiating the future of the West Bank and the [Palestinian] refugee problem."

Similar to Kissinger

One source close to Mr. Dayan said that the former foreign minis-ter's negotiating role would be sim-ilar to the level of diplomatic responsibility assumed by Henry A. Kissinger when he was national security adviser and, later, secretary of state. On the diplomatic level, Mr. Dayan is seeking to resume the powers he had in negotiating and implementing the September. 1978, Camp David accords, before Interior Minister Yosef Burg was named by Mr. Begin to head the Israeli negotiating team in discussions with Egypt over the pro-posed autonomy scheme for the occupied territories.

"He also wants to be co-ordina-tor of the West Bank and Gaza. He believes in a daily rapport with the Arabs there, and believes that he is in a unique position to ac-complish that," a Dayan confidant said. Currently, the job of co-ordinator of the territories is held by Brig. Gen. Danny Matt, an army officer.

Sources said that Mr. Dayan would attempt to implement his long-cherished goal of unilaterally imposing limited autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza, over the prolessed objections of all of the mayors and other Arab political lead-tions. It is even more doubtful, some political analysts said, that Mr. Peres would offer anybody such sweeping powers unless it were certain that the Labor alignment could not form a coalition government otherwise.

Moreover, such a move would incur the wrath of the army command, which has responsibility for the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and would undercut the powers of the future foreign minister, who is expected to be Abba Eban, foreign minister and ambassador in the last Labor government.

As a result, political analysts said, it appears inevitable that Mr. Dayan will throw a monkey wrench into the delicate balance of the upcoming elections and, in the event of a stalemate and an inability of any party to form a govern-ment, broker a powerful position for himself. Some Labor officials are known to be worried that Mr. Dayan could siphon away seven or eight seats from labor, which could be enough to deprive Mr. Peres of the chance of forming a coalition in the 120-seat parliament, assuming the Likud made a reasonable showing.

There has been concern that Mr. Dayan, 65, may be too ill for the rigors of a campaign. He has had a cancerous tumor removed, and appears drawn and fatigued at times. However, associates said he is active and energetic, and that the cancer is in total remission. He is not undergoing any radiation or chemical therapy, they said.

U.S. Studying Proposals To Reduce Violent Crime

By Robert Pear New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Justice Department officials are developing a package of legislative proposals to increase the federal government's ability to fight violent crime.

Department officials said the proposals included tightening of the bail law, establishing federal jurisdiction over some crimes, such as murder for hire, that traditionally have been prosecuted by state authorities, and developing new means to assist crime victims.

White House aides are studying the idea of a presidential commission on victims of crime, recommended by one of the advisory groups President Reagan, then a candidate, appointed last year. Frank G. Carrington of Virgin ia chairman of the panel, said that Edwin Meese 3d, Mr. Reagan's counselor, was very enthusiastic about such a commission. Mr. Meese was a criminologist at the University of San Diego School of Law before he came to Washington.

Victims' Rights Week

White House officials said Mr. Reagan might proclaim April 20-26 National Victims' Rights Week, to coincide with appointment of the commission.

The emphasis on victims' rights is intended to counterbalance what Mr. Meese, Mr. Carrington and others regard as the courts' longstanding emphasis on the legal rights of defendants. In a speech Sunday at an American Bar Association convention in Texas, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger said the constitutional balance had tipped too far in favor of defendants. Violent crime has been described as one of the nation's most serious problems by Attorney General William French Smith and by Mr. Burger. Mr. Smith said at his confirmation hearing last month that his top priority for the Justice Department was to lead a national effort against violent

Legislative Proposals

With that cue, Roger A. Pauley, director of the office of legislation in the Justice Department's criminal division, and his colleagues began assembling proposals. Many were drawn from the criminal code legislation that was approved last year by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but never considered by the full Senate. Similar proposals would probably receive an even more (avorable reception from the Judiciary Committee this year, with Republicans now holding 10 of the 18 seats on the committee. Department officials said they were studying these proposals:

 Murder for hire could be made a sederal offense. Justice Department officials said that federal investigative expertise might help solve a substantial number of contract murders.

 While not advocating preventive detention as such, Justice Department officials see merit in allowing judges to consider the safety of the community when setting conditions for the pretrial release of a person on bail. Under current law, the only legitimate purpose of bail is to ensure a suspect's appearance at a trial; danger to the community is generally not to be con-

Windfall: A Progress Report

Most of the U.S. oil companies have now published their earnings for the past year. showing - as perhaps you expected - a brisk improvement in earnings from last year. Or any other year, for that matter. But the companies emphasize that their fourthquarter earnings were in general just about the same as in the fourth quarter of 1979. The suggestion is that the profit curve is flattening out. Maybe so. But you ought to keep in mind that, since last March, the oil industry has been paying the windfall tax - a tax that it has repeatedly described as onerous, damaging and excessive. Even after paying this heavy new tax, the oil industry was making as much money in late 1980 as it did before that tax was imposed.

Many people in the oil industry are pressing the Reagan administration to repeal the windfall tax. But events since it was enacted last winter have fully confirmed the wisdom of it. The purpose of this tax is not to punish or harass the oil industry - which, we shall state once again, is doing a valuable job very much in the national interest and doing it with great technical skill. The industry argues that, without the tax, it would have more money to invest in exploration for more oil. But the enormous rise in oil prices is already providing the industry with incentives beyond the most manic fantasies of the wildest wildcatters. Drilling is up 30 percent over this time last year. The ending of price controls promises still greater incentives and threatens still more oil-field inflation as companies bid against each other for scarce equipment and technicians. Exploration could hardly be proceeding faster.

The case for the oil windfall tax is simply that it provides an essential shock-absorber to the U.S. economy, during a vast and sudden transfer of income to the oil industry from everybody else. It limits the rate at which money piles up in the oil companies cash registers. This year the windfall tax will probably bring in about $19 billion. That's not a small figure. By comparison, the total revenue of all U.S. corporation income taxes is running around $65 billion a year. The truly staggering thing is that the oil companies are paying a tax as large as this one without suffering any decline in net income.

The proper use of the windfall tax is to recycle oil profits back to the rest of U.S. business. The oil companies bitterly object to this concept, with its implication that they are winning their high profits at the expense of other businesses. But something very much like that is clearly happening. The oil people argue that economic growth is not a zero-sum game. Certainly not -- but there is a limit to the speed with which revenue flows can be wrenched toward one sector, away from all the others.

The best reason for a cut in business taxes this year is precisely to offset some of the tremendous weight of energy costs on other industries. A very rapid shift of income to the oil producers can only result in inflation and unemployment elsewhere in the economy. The windfall tax on oil, coupled with the coming reductions in other business taxes, is indispensable to limit the strain on the national economy as oil prices keep rising.

The Untouchables

There are two constituencies, the Reagan administration has decided, that it does not care to engage in the coming budget battle. They are both hotly emotional, fully organized and highly combative: the elderly people who get Social Security checks, and the veterans. Mr. Reagan has moved quickly and firmly to reassure them that their interests are entirely safe. That represents good, cautious political judgment. But as social and fiscal policy, it's not quite so encouraging.

There will be no cuts in the basic Social Security pensions, the White House says including the indexing formula that overcom-pensates them for inflation. There will similarly be no cuts in Medicare, with its health insurance for the elderly, or in the program that guarantees a minimum benefit for the elderly poor. The veterans' pensions are to be equally immune - the most justified and the least justified alike. To those programs the president has added several much smaller ones that benefit the children of poor families, most of them in the inner cities. There you have the list of the untouchables — the programs that, unlike the rest of the budget, can look forward to the coming year with serene confidence.

The decision on Social Security threatens to make another increase in the payroll tax inevitable within the next several years. If the present indexing formula remains un-changed, the Social Security trust fund will begin to scrape bottom sometime within a couple of years. That point can be staved off, very temporarily, by trimming some of the marginal Social Security benefits. Mr. Reagan apparently intends to do away, for example, with the college benefits for recipients' children. Perhaps the Reagan administration will resort to borrowing among the various trust funds to postpone the evil moment a bit further, as the Carter administration had intended to do. But Mr. Reagan's retreat on the basic benefits constitutes a warning that, for all of the talk about income tax cuts, an increase in the payroll tax remains a very lively possibility.

As for the veterans' pensions, there was never any question about the benefits to people who were injured in military service. That commitment is beyond challenge. But what about those pensions to nearly two million veterans whose disabilities have nothing to do with military service? Those pensions go only to veterans who are poor, and often the disability is simply old age. It is, in effect, a separate welfare system. Because it overlaps with other welfare systems, there is no reason whatever to perpetuate it - except, of course, that the veterans' organizations consider it their own, and are prepared to defend it vehemently whether it makes any sense or

All together, the untouchables constitute nearly one-third of the total federal budget. If you add the defense money, which can only increase, and the interest on the debt, you will discover that fully two-thirds of the budget is now immune to cutting, by either national necessity or presidential declaration.

Mr. Reagan has now put himself in some danger of drifting toward the uncomfortable position of his last several predecessors, who watched the budget swell while they complained bitterly that it was uncontrollable. As Mr. Reagan and his colleagues have repeatedly told the country, a budget is uncontrollable only if presidents and Congresses consider it so. To sweat the promised $50 billion out of Mr. Carter's $739 billion budget for 1982 seemed at least possible. To get $50 billion out of a budget of $235 billion which is the residue, after defense, debt interest and untouchables — is a less promising enterprise. As more elements of the budget are declared exempt from the scissors, the impact of the cuts will necessarily fall with greater force on the vulnerable remainder.

WASHINGTON - Referring to unemployment doles as "opiates of government charity," President Hoover in a nationwide radio address tonight emphatically opposed any measures destined to invoke direct federal aid for the country's jobless or for sufferers from last summer's drought. He declared that the government sought to improve the situation by its example in aiding plans for development and employment projects, and also of affording credits for drought victims cooperating with the aid of the community and "thus avoid the stifling of the national spirit of self-help." He also commented that never before in conditions of depression had there been so little social disorder.

The Polish Dilemm Confronting Reaga

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — If the Soviet Union were on the verge of bankruptcy, would the United States offer its financial aid? Of course not; the collapse of the Soviet economy would be proof that Communism does not work, a realization devoutly to be wished.

If Communist-run Poland were on the verge of bankruptcy, would the United States offer that nation financial aid? The obvious answer inancial aid? The obvious answer is, again, of course not — let the Russians, who imposed the unworkable system on Poland, bail it out. If they cannot pay the costs of their imperialism, let them withdraw to their own borders.

But obvious answers may be appropriate the Reason ad-wrong answers. The Reagan administration is beginning to wres-tle with its first far-ranging foreign policy decision: whether to let the economic chaos in Poland come to economic chaos in roland come to a head — thereby saddling the So-viet Union with a foreign aid head-ache or a debilitating military oc-cupation — or to join with West-ern allies in taking some of the fi-nancial pressure off the Polish Communist government.

The dovish reason to assist the Polish government would be to try to avoid bloodshed between the Red Army and the Polish workers and farmers. The hawkish reason to help would be to impose condi-tions that would lead to gradual economic and political reform in effect, to begin to wean the Eastern Europeans away from Soviet domination.

Add to these reasons the financial exposure of banks in Britain, West Germany and France, who are Poland's creditors and who will urge their leaders to prevail on the United States to join some consor-tium for Polish stability, or to bring in the International Mone-

President Reagan will be asked to accept a share in the de facto debt rescheduling already under way, as European banks give government-guaranteed loans to Poland to help avoid default on inter-

But the West cannot be expected to come up with the $7 billion in credit needed this year without some specific commitments from Poland - and the Soviet Union that the causes of the distress will be cured.

Let's say, for argument's sake, the Russians allow the Poles to join the International Monetary Fund. That is not impossible, since Romania is already a member, as is Yugoslavia

The IMF would then extend credit to Poland, as it did to Zaire and Brazil, with hard-nosed requirements that the Polish economy set its house in order. That means curbing imports, stopping subsidies, raising worker produc-tivity and tightening the belt generally.

That is exactly what the Soviet overnment wants, and the Polish Communist Party wants; but such austerity is exactly what the Polish freedom workers of Solidarity do not want. Lech Walesa wants a five-day workweek, not the current more wages, not less; lower sumer prices, not higher Communist Party will use the requirements as the excuseing Solidarity's demands. Polish ers will be forced to sacrifig Communists will blame the talist bankers.

Burger's Call to Arms

By Tom Wicker

NEW YORK — Two cheers for where are hard-pressed cities like Chief Justice Warren E. Cleveland and New York to find the money for the needed judges, Burger, who told the American Bar Association the other day that defense against crime was as vital to national security as "the budget of the Pentagon." In fact, it's proba-bly of more immediate concern to most Americans

With no empty blasts about "getting tough," Mr. Burger said many other things that needed to be said — for example, that the great cost of lowering crime rates would be less "than the billions in dollars and thousands of blighted lives now hostage to crime." Nor is this an elitist view, since crime afflicts "the poor and minorities even more than the affluent."

Emotional Subject We need the undoubted deterrence of "swift arrest, prompt trial, certain penalty, and — at some point — finality of judgment." And to mount a real attack on crime will demand "more money than we have ever before devoted to law enforcement," as well as much rethinking of what law en-forcement should be. Still, on such a complex and emotional subject, the chief justice inevitably raised more questions than he provided answers. It's true that crime will not disappear "if we but abolish poverty." But it's more important that poverty and inequity and lack of economic opportunity breed crime, particularly when exacerbated by racial ani-mosities, as in the United States. And where so much poverty exists in such proximity to so much affluence, the crime-breeding effect is likely to be greater.

The chief justice's specific proposals, moreover, will not be easy to effect, even when their validity is accepted. Trial "within weeks of is accepted. Trial "within weeks of more people to prison. He also unarrest" is highly desirable, but derstands that to send them to the prosecutors, police officers? And in most such cities, by far the most cases are now disposed of by plea bargaining rather than by trial.

Mr. Burger also proposed em-powering judges to hold arrested persons without bail when "a com-bination of the particular crime and past record" makes it likely that the defendant will commit another crime while awaiting trial. This is of dubious constitutionality; it rests on judges' uncertain ability to predict human behavior and thus poses a high risk of injustice in a system already fraught with it; and anyway, in 1967, the President's Commission on Law Enforcement concluded that there was only a "relatively small percentage of defendants who present a significant risk of flight or crimi-nal conduct before trial."

The commission also pointed out that the best way to deal with that small percentage was by speedy trials. Thus, the chief jus-tice might find more support for concentrating on that proposal, which most criminal justice authorities support, rather than for controversial pre-trial detention. His argument for limiting the scope of appellate review of criminal convictions to "genuine claims of miscarriage of justice, and not a quest for error" also rests on judg-es' questionable ability to tell one from the other. And while inmate appeals do flood the courts, most are refused without hearing and with only cursory consideration. Is this really a major cause of high crime rates?

Unlike many reformers, Mr.

Burger knows that his proposals, if carried out, would send many overcrowded, underfunded, i quately staffed and policed a of the United States would his purpose; because more more frightening, criminals out of these schools of crime violence than go into them

His prison reform proposal nevertheless the weakest per his package. He wants p physically rebuilt "to provide cent setting for mandatory tional and vocational programs signed to "change" or to "care mates, who would be released at least a basic education. ism" of which Mr. Burger is where critical.

Even if rebuilt at costs taxpa are rarely willing to shoulder, i tutions to cage humans ca provide a "decent setting". tainly not maximum security ons. Little evidence exists ha habilitation programs, partial if mandatory, can be effective that criminals can be comeven in the most "decent" programs. — let alone the many that are foundly indecent. There's even to suggest that the public and s legislators are willing to pay such programs.

Princeton University Professor Eric S. Goldman calls them Upper Americans and suggests their fundamental credo might be: Let's not be Middle American."

While there is a certain humorous tone to Goldman's observations, the underlying theme is a serious one: The growing influ-ence of Upper Americans, coupled with their disdain for Middle Americans, may make it impossible to develop a national consensus in the United States.

Goldman writes about the evolution of Upper Americans in "Reflections of Ameri-ca." a collection of essays issued by the Census Bureau to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Statistical Abstract. A former presidential consultant, Gold-

Upper Americans have brought much to the country, according to Goldman, including their increased knowledge about public policy, receptivity to change, a more humane artitude toward the disadvantaged and a heightening of taste in literature and the arts.

This is somewhat tempered, however, by the possibility of their avoidance of things Middle American becoming simple snob-

Upper Americans tend to forget that they are just one more special interest group, he says, because they believe they are basing their opinions on superior comprehension. The Middle American reaction to this new group is displayed in a statement Goldman attributes to a Middle American in Denver: "Those people make you feel like some kind of clod. They not only usually have more money; they say your ideas are dumb, going to a hockey game is low class, and your wife has a frowsy hairdo."

Such personal and emotional division between groups. Goldman warns, can seriously hamper the process of reaching a national consensus on public issues.

Latest Groum

Goldman's essay reports that the Upper American is the latest group or class in a nation formed by Frontier Americans, developed by Urban Americans and largely populated by Middle Americans.

Upper Americans have not only gone to college, he says, but "to the kind of institu-tion where the dominant climate of opinion was impatience with, if not contempt for, the

Ballet in England

Robert North Takes 'Songs and Dances' on Tour

By Noel Goodwin International Herold Tribine

ONDON - What may be Robert North's last new work sashes, the men in shirts and for London Contemporary Dance slacks, with bright, sunny lighting for London Contemporary Dance Theatre is an attractive addition to the repertory on its current tour.
"Songs and Dances," seen at Oxford this week, is a further and more elaborate stage in North's continuing love affair with Schu-bert's music. It also extends a more romantic image which much of the company's recent repertory seems

The Charleston-born dancer is the designated new artistic director for Ballet Rambert and is presently acting in that capacity for LCDT during the sabbatical absence of Robert Cohan. North's background includes classical ballet (at the Royal Ballet School) as well as a spell with the Martha Graham company, and the combi-nation of influences has given him a distinctive personality as a dancer as well as a romantically inclined style as a choreographer. "Songs and Dances" is structured to Schubert's isolated quartet-movement in C minor followed by a group of seven songs. The quartet music accompanies a first part subtitled "Out of Doors," with an ensemble of 14 dancers in multicolored full skirts and intensifying the carefree mood. Running entries match the mu-sic's initial impetuosity, resolving into more formal groupings rang-ing from a duo of dancers to a double quartet. The lines are fluid, with meetings and partings in overlapping entrances and exits, and nothing very deep or disturbing in the emotional character. At the music's final chords the dancence and give a formal bow. Part two is "Indoors," with a singer and pianist on a small stage dais, and a large window structure at the back. The scene becomes an informal soirce, modern in appearance but with touches of bygone social courtesies. Some dancers stand or sit listening to the musicians, while others perform in sequence to the songs. These are an arbitrary choice, including Serenade," the "Erl King" as a centerpiece of dramatic mime and

ers turn in unison to face the audidance (a male duo) and sinister silhouettes beyond the window, and breaking into groups of three, four tion to dramatic illustration, and or five. All are barefoot, the girls touches of humorous realism. make this part a less convincing entity. There was nevertheless an all-round accomplishment of danc-ing, led by North himself, and an acceptable level of performance from the musicians involved in each part. A similar parallel is apparent in Cohan's "Place of Change" (1975) which has newly returned to the repertory. This takes the emotional heart-searching of Schoenberg's second string quartet, with its set-ting of Stefan George poems in each of the last two movements, as a means to heighten the choreographic theme of earthly love lifted to something approaching transfi-guration at the end.

The main focus of interest is on a duet of turbulent relationships in the second movement (vividly danced this time by North and Sallie Estep), and a stalking yet benign figure of destiny elsewhere, admirably personified in a welcome return to performance of rehearsal director Lenny Westerdijk. The company is in Leeds next week and Liverpool in April.

Savile Row Sews Profitably Through U.K. Slump

By Susan Heller Anderson New York Times Service

ONDON - With an unshakable disdain for fashions, fripperies and fads, the exclusive custom tailors of Savile Row are sailing through Britain's worst retail slump in three years with dis-creet prosperity. For the shops that survived wars by stitching uniforms for gentlemen soldiers, to-day's hard times are mere hiccups in their fortunes.

When there's a slump, conservative fashion and quality become the rule of the day, declared Paul Lewis, chairman of the bespoke, or made-to-order, division of the Lincroft Kilgour Group Ltd., a $34.8-million public company whose holdings include Kilgour, French & Stanbury and Bernard Weatherill of London, among Savile Row's largest establishments. "People want things that last," he said.

The three largest Savile Row companies are Henry Poole & Co., the Kilgour-Weatherill Group and H. Huntsman & Sons, each a product of consolidation. Kilgour, on nearby Dover Street, acquired Weatherill, a prestigious tailor of hunting clothes, and Tommy Nutter, an inspired young designer with a starry clientele. Then, Kilgour merged with Holland & Lewis, the fabric company, Poole's, on Cork Street, acquired the bespoke tailor Sullivan & Wooley, Huntsman's is part of a group that in-cludes the queen's bootmaker and a company that specialized in made-to-order clothing for chil-

Comparable in Size

While guarding their minuscule differences, all three are similar in size. Both Kilgour's and Huntsman reported sales of $2.4 million for 1980, while Poole was slightly behind at $1.8 million. Exports accounted for 80 percent of Poole's and Kilgour's sales, and 70 percent of Huntsman's. Kilgour's and Poole's have 70 employees each, Huntsman 130.

The cost of a two-piece suit, depending on the cloth, has doubled in five years to $1,440 at Kilgour's, $960 at Poole's and $1,800 at Huntsman. But Savile Row tailors do not think in such limited time spans, for their suits are built to last at least a dozen years.

They vie for a clientele made up of royalty, aristocrats, businessmen, prominent politicians, show business personalities and "beautiful people." including a handful of women. "Our average customer is 45 years old." said Frederick Linamong its clients. Kilgour's cus-tomers are younger, because of Tommy Nutter. "And they all are very cost-conscious." Lewis said.

"Even Paul Getty was always getting his suits fixed."

Angus Cundey, director of Poole's, says his average customer is between 45 and 55 years old and most likely a businessman. Lintott estimates that 85 percent of Savile Row's trade comes from business

Orton's 'Loot' Is a Delight in French

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss International Herald Tribune

DARIS - It is only 40 minutes from London to Paris, but it has taken 14 years for Joe Orton's play. "Loot." to cross the channel. Its author has long been dead, murdered in 1967, and his play was written before rigid censorship of the English stage was Now adapted into French by Eric Kahane - as "Le Butin" — it has opened at a miniature Montpar-nasse playhouse, the Theatre de Poche, to the general glee of the Parisian press, and this "thumbs up" rea tion assures it for lengthy and prosperous local life.

A bad-mannered, macabre farce of the sick '60s, it has survived its period by its exuberant humor, its delight in ridicule and its irresistible impudence. Its dramaturgy is shockingly shabby and laughs at itself. Its makeshift plot maneuvers revolve about a funeral in a lower middle-class household of Catholic persuasion. The son, a thief, has hidden his "loot" in his mother's coffin which necessitates the removal of the corpse and its constant manhandling. The father is a pious fogy, the nurse is a predatory bitch, the son's chum is a finagling undertaker and the Scotland Yard detective is a brute and a crook.

John Lahr, an American critic, has published in 'Prick Up Your Ears" an exhaustive study of the author. Orton's biography warrants dramatization and it is surprising that it has not yet tempted a playwright. The son of a suburban gardener, he studied acting and devised playlets for the BBC. His initial, full-length comedy, "Entertaining Mr. Sloan." including grisly murder, placed him in the West End spot-light, "Loot" followed and he left an unfinished mancript, "What the Butler Saw," set in a mental clinic.

His own fate was similar to violent incidents he employed in his plays. His rising reputation and the demand for his work — the Beatles contemplated engaging him to write a script for them - enraged his envious and insane flat-mate who, fearing he would be abandoned, battered out Orton's brains with a hammer and committed suicide.

tott, managing director of Hunts-man, which counts several of Presi-dent Reagan's Cabinet members "Loot" is in luck in its current production. Etienne Bierry has staged it briskly so there is no time for the audience to meditate on its improbabilities, and the Simone Valere and Jean Desailly, an acting couple of rare refinement, are to the contemporary French theater what the Lunts were to the Anglo-American stage. They have recruited their own company and are occupying the Theatre de la Madeleine.

They opened their season with a negligible come-die-bouffe by Yves Jamiaque, an arch parody of the mores of Victorian England. It failed to please, but the second item of their program has found favor. It is a charming piece, drawn by Mario Reinhard from the letters of Chopin. George Sand and Delacroix—with Reinhard at the piano for its accompanying music — and is being performed at 6 p.m. on Saturdays by members of the troupe, but without the stars.

The stars are again in their element in a revival of Girandoux's "Siegfried." This was Girandoux's first play, adapted from his novel at the request of Louis Jouvet, who directed and acted in it, introducing a brilliant new dramatist to the international scene.

The story of a French soldier who suffers amnesia from wounds received on the 1914-18 battlefield and, mistaken for a German, is hospitalized in enemy land. There he recovers his physical health, but has no memory of his past. He believes he is German and rises to political prominence in the muddle of post-

From this situation Giraudoux devises a pacifist drama, exposing the futility of armed conflict. This was in 1928, before the Nazi menace had raised its ugly head, but the play has survived World War II to again deliver its message.

"Siegfried" remains a good play and it is per-suasively played by Desailly as its schizophrenic hero. Valere and the admirable cast in support. Georges Wilson has directed it at a pace that occasionally lags, but this is inevitable as the play has much to say and often stands still to say it.

Delta Outlines $7-Billion Buying Plans

New York Times Service NEW YORK - In a statement that seemed aimed in part at spurring competition among aircraft manufacturers. Delta Air Lines said Wednesday that it planned to spend $7 billion to acquire about 140 new fuel-saving airliners over a 15-year period, starting in 1986. Some industry analysts said the unusually detailed disclosure of long-range plans also served the prolitable carrier's interests by underscoring a public image of Delta's financial strength — the com-pany is the airline industry's most stent profit maker. The statement also reflects Delta's plans for modest expansion in an era when other major carriers, beset by losses, are cutting back.

Delta's $7 billion in purchases would be in addition to the $3 billion worth of Boeing 757s that the airline decided to order last year, a

Delta official said. From Delta headquarters in Atlanta, William Berry, chief spokes-man for the airline, said it hoped that Boeing, McDonnell Dougles and Airbus Industrie would compete for $5 billion worth of the new orders, a total of about 100 short-range, 150-passenger aircraft whose design is still unselected. He said Delta had already been in touch with the three concerns about the planes. The remaining $2 billion is to go for roughly 40 more Boeing 757s. "Inat's the largest such annonnement I've ever heard of from an airline," said Barry Gordon, executive vice president of the National Aviation and Technology Corp., a mutual fund specializing in aviation and high-technology securities. The $3-billion price tag for Del-ta's initial purchase, announced year, of 60 of the low-noise, fuel-efficient 757s comprises $1.5 billion for the planes and another $1.5 billion for spare parts and other equipment. The 60 planes are to be delivered between 1984 and 1990, and a Boeing spokesman said the additional 40 would be delivered in the 1990s.

EEC Union Plan Rouses Business, Labor

Lashington Part Service BRUSSELS - A controversial European Ecunomic Community measure that would effectively alter the ground rules of international capitalism is now the focus of "unprecedented" business hastility, both in Europe and the United States, according to business officials here.

Such hostility to the Common Market initiative - which would give trade union representatives in multinational businesses operating in Europe advance consultation rights on atrategic company decisions — is countered by equally vocilerous support from the European trade union confederation headquartered in Brussels.

"How much information can a manager be ex-pected to give to the leaders of Communist-con-trolled labor organizations?" asked one business official here concerned about the impact of the proposals in Italy. "He's not going to give confi-dential information to people who are just as likely to slip it off to Moscow us to the local employ-

The depth of feeling sparked by the proposals, termed the "Vredeling initiative" after Hendrikus Vredeling, the Dutch Socialist politician who authored them, contrasts sharply with the usually plodding rhythm of EEC political life.

"It is the only EEC issue that has ever really struck at the heart of American corporate inter-ests," said an official here, who stressed that the basic conflict is the one between traditionally accepted views of capitalism and a new brand of European industrial democracy.

A fierce lobbying campaign between interna-tional business and organized European labor is now under way. Sources predict that labor and industry pressure — to be directed at the EEC Commission, its Parliament and member governments -could last throughout 1981.

Business antagonism to the EEC proposals, made late last year and soon to be examined by the European Parliament and member govern-ments, is burgeoning amid signs that the Europe-an and U.S. corporate establishments are orchestrating a counter-offensive in two key meetings scheduled in Brussels and Washington next week.

Leading representatives of European industry, under the chairmanship of Guide Carli, former governor of the Bank of Italy, will meet here next Thursday at the headquarters of Unice. The mouthpiece of the EEC employers' association. Unice condemns the move as imposing "rigid requirements that can only act as a further inhibiting factor for potential investment." The European meeting will follow a similar top-level strategy session to be held in Washington on Wednesday with representatives of U.S. business, whose interest in the EEC proposals is termed "phenomenal" by U.S. sources here. The aim of the Washington meeting — which will include groups such as the National Foreign Trade Council and the U.S.-EEC Businessmen's Council — is to formulate opposition to the EEC move, focusing lobbying particularly on European govern-ments and the EEC Commission, possibly via the

Two particularly "dangerous" aspects of the proposals, according to Anne Harrington of the American Chamber of Commerce in Belgium, would be "to strip international management of its decision-making powers" and "to take a first step towards international collective bargaining with organized labor.

Business sees the proposal as forcing companies to divulge sensitive information, not simply to the local European workforce of multinationals' subsidiaries, but to trade unions which are sometimes seen as major political opponents.

While multinational companies claim to support improved industrial relations, the prospect of transnational union bargaining power has haunted them ever since international bodies like the EEC and the OECD (in its 1976 code on multinational enterprises) have begun setting new stand-tional enterprises) have begun setting new stand-ards for employee-management relations.

Acute U.S. business antagonism to the EEC ini-tiative, shared in large part by European industry, is fully matched and partially explained by the equally outspoken backing given it by the politi-cally influential ETUC, a Socialist organization combining powerful labor groups in Britain and West Germany.

NEW YORK — Computer stocks and some energy issues took New York Stock Exchange prices lower in light trading Thursday as investors continued to worry about interest rates and the economy. Analysts said investors are worried that strong January retail sales reported Wednesday mean interest rates are unlikely to drop much. Analysis also said investors were cautious before Friday's release of wholesale price statistics.

The man with exceptional goals needs an exceptional bank.

What makes Trade Development Bank exceptional? To start with, there is our policy of concentrating on things we do unusually well. For example, trade and export financing, foreign exchange and banknores, money market transactions and precious metals.

Geographically, too, we work mainly in areas where we have something special to offer. This includes the U.S.A., where our subsidizry, Republic National Bank of New York, is one of America's 30 largest banks, it also includes a number of less familiar countries, where our exceptional knowledge of local conditions can be an important advantage for dients.

What's more, we keep our backoffice systems running abreast of our business. You may not notice this directly, but it shows up in quicker decisions and fewer errors.

While we move fast in serving our dients, we're distinctly traditional-ist in our basic policies. At the heart of our business is the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also welldiversified, and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertain times.

If TDB sounds like the sort of bank you would like to entrust with your business, get in touch with us. We're ready to serve you in most of the world's financial centers.

TDB Holding Group: US$ 8.5 billion in assets; US$ 637 million in capital and loan funds employed as of June 30, 1980.

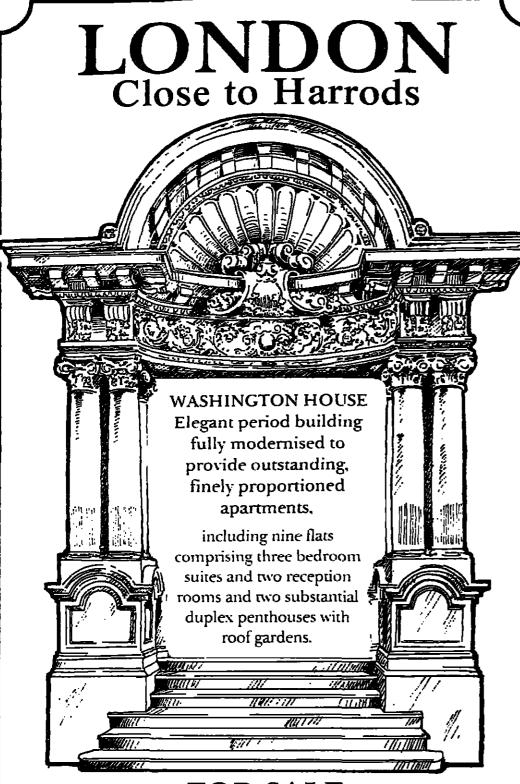

Key Group offices: Geneva, London, Paris. Luxembourg, New York (Republic National Bank of New York). Other offices in Beirut, Buenos Aires, Caracas, Chiasso, Frankfurt, Hong Kong, Los Angeles, Mexico City, Mizmi, Montevideo, Nassau, Panama City, Rio de Janeiro, Santiago de Chile, São Paulo, Yokyo.

That is the date implement his predecessor's interwhen Mr. Carter froze all such as-sets after fran's seizure of the hos-national agreement.

The president has broad constitutional and statutory powers to conduct foreign affairs without in-terference from the courts. But no president has attempted to sweep away court orders and lawsuits by decree in order to ship out of the country billions of dollars of foreign assets claimed by Americans, as Mr. Carter agreed to do.

EDS argues in its brief that "in its understandable zeal to end the illegal imprisonment of Americans by defendant, the government of Iran, the executive branch has adhered to agreements which, if applied to EDS, will clearly cross the outermost boundaries of the executive's legal powers under the Constitution and statutes of the United States."

Badische Kommunale Landesbank, Mannheim, one of Southwest Germany's leading banks, recorded satisfactory results in 1980. The balance sheet total surpassed DM 20 billion, rising from DM 19.3 billion to DM 20.3 billion, an increase of 5.1%.

Lending activity accounted for a significant proportion of the Bank's growth in 1980: Loan volume was up 10.5% rising from DM 13.3 billion to DM 14.7 billion.

Funding was conducted primarily through bonds (DM 2.9 billion) and SD Certificates (DM 0.4 billion). At year-end, the volume of the Bank's own paper in circulation was some DM 10 billion.

In 1980, BAKOLA broadened its international service potential by opening Badische Kommunale Landesbank (Switzerland) Ltd., in Zurich. The wholly-owned subsidiary offers investment counselling, portfolio management and trustee services, and deals in currencies, precious metals and securities.

Badische Kommunale Landesbank International S.A., the wholly-owned Luxembourg subsidiary, further strengthened its Eurobanking activities, with emphasis on Eurocredits as well as money market and foreign exchange Forfaitierung und Finanz AG (FFZ), Zurich, expanded its market position in its specialized areas of activity, especially non-recourse export financing (à forfait).

Badische Kommunale Landesbank is a regional universal bank linked to Germany's powerful network of savings banks and performing centralized functions for Baden's

AMBITIÖN

The Secret Passion By Joseph Epstein. Dutton: 312 pp. $13.95

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

T'S a tricky semantic game that the critic Joseph Epstein plays in his new book. "Ambition: The Secret Passion." an investigation of American attitudes toward achievement by the editor of The American Scholar magazine and author of two previous works of nonfiction, "Divorced in America" and "Familiar Territory." When he talks about the decline of ambition in the United States, he really has two senses of the word "ambi-tion" in mind, which he seems to alternate at his convenience.

On the one hand, he uses the first definition of ambition in Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary, which is "an ardent desire for rank, fame or power." Of course, we take a dim view of that sort of ambition, which is almost a negative attribute. People have been doing so since the dawn of Western civilization, as any an-thology of quotations will reveal, where, from Quintilian's "Ambition is a vice, but it may be the father of virtue" to Oscar Wilde's "Ambition is the last refuge of the failure," 9 out of 10 references treat ambition pejoratively.

Falling Into the Trap

On the other hand, Epstein treats ambition in a more functional sense, as "the fuel of achieve ment" - to quote his own definition — without which none of us could get out of bed in the morning, let alone fight and win the day's battles. So his trick is to argue, first, that ambition has fallen on hard times in America, mean-ing ambition in the pejorative sense, and to say, then, that some people are still getting things done, which means the best people still have ambition, in the second sense of the word. If we are not careful, we fall into Epstein's trap and find ourselves mumbling with him at the end: "Yeah, what's the matter with you, dissenters of America? Why aren't you behind those who are getting things done?"

What is Epstein really trying to say? It takes a while to see, because his book progresses very cir-cuitously. It begins by breaking down the concept of ambition in its broadest sense, into its implications, and then proceeds to examine in a series of chapters such big ideas as goal setting, success, mon-ey, power, social class, failure and work, among a number of others. particularly as they have been treated in American literature.

Each of these chapters is fre-quently and somewhat arbitrarily interrupted by one- or two-para-graph anecdotal items titled "Curiosity Shop" and by lengthier bio-graphical sketches of such prominent Americans as Benjamin Franklin, Henry Adams, John D. Rockefeller, the du Ponts, the Guggenheims, Henry Ford, Henry R. Luce, Edith Wharton, the Kennedys, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Adlai E. Stevenson and Wallace Stevens. The effect is that of a three-ring circus, with criticism, anecdote multaneously, pantomiming the history of American popular culture and why Money, Fame and Power fell out of favor with those who purvey the American Myth.

None of it is a penalty to read. Epstein is a discerning critic, whose muscular prose is both lucid and discriminating. The "Curiosity Shop" items - which range from a vignette set in small-claims court to an acid description of the old "What's My Line?" as a television program designed to show off "the stupidity of the rich" — are invari-ably fun to examine. The sketches famous Americans, though mostly built from prominent biographies of the last two decades and therefore rather too familiar extremely by nevertheless extremely and lively.

But it doesn't really bear clear what Epstein is about the his last biographical sketch of An Unknown Soldier, whis quiet, but emphatic celebrat the career of a nameless businessman who set his hear goals and achieved them was guilt or confusion a straight, a Babbitt with a sense, his limitations, the salt of Mit America. He had worked his long, and it had given him darter; he had realized his dream it had given him pleasure. He a man who never complained a man who never complained himself. Ambition served himself. himself. Ambition served him himself. Ambition served himself. Ambition served him? How many others are there him? More perhaps, than might guess.

One is tempted to respons this that if there are note that that one might guess, then the celebrated by American toyel or looked up to by the consist ture that was born in the 150 Isn't it part of their very limes they go about their insurance gardless of who is being about in People magazine med on television?

But to argue with Francisch this line is to fall into his server in the s

BRIDGE.

THE oldest bridge club in the world, and in many ways the most remarkable, is the Portland in London. It was founded as a whist club during the Napoleonic Wars, under another name, and was reconstituted in 1825 as the Portland for the sole purpose of re-moving one highly impopular member. In 1895 the club produced the first code of laws for bridge and has aided in revising them ever since.

Bridge at the Portland has two features that are perhaps unique. Instead of charging a card fee for a session of play, the club collects a percentage of the winnings and charges losers nothing. And the players use no conventions at all. On the diagramed deal, South, a member of the Portland who worthily inherits all these traditions, could see substantial slam prospects when his partner opened three spades. The best way to ex-

This ended the auction abruptly, for North was not inclined to bid on with a singleton heart and thin spades. An inspired spade lead would have been a success, but West made the normal lead of the club ace. A spade shift would still have been effective, for South would have lost a ruff and eventually a spade trick. But this was not clear to West, who continued with a club in the faint hope of achieving a third round ruff.

is the general manager, something else has been overlooked in another area. I used to pack up pieces of paper myself." The Packer coach and general manager were one and the same — Dan Devine — and the Rodskins did win, 17-6.

Upon his latest departure from the Rams, Al-len was mocked for his Queeglike concerns having crackers in the same food line as the soup and a certain kind of toothpaste in his hathroom.

"I'm sure I rubbed a lot of people the wrong way," he says. "They say, 'Boy, this gay's mitty. What difference does it make? We're goma win the division anyway."

"But those are things that make you orga-nized. There were so many things that didn't make any sense. Nobody cared."

Allen said he was "astounded" to learn the Rams didn't have a copying machine that could reduce. "I don't like this size paper," he says, waving a long, legal-size statistical sheet. "It doesn't fit into notebooks, It takes up too much storage room, I prefer 81/2-by-] |."

Subject: $30-Million Outfit

But he ran into opposition when he asked for different machine. Said Allen; "And we're talking about a $30-million organization "I've been that way all my life, not just when I came to the Rams. I was that way at Morningside College. I haven't changed. I don't want to change. Those things are important to me be-cause they're all part of winning. But some people don't like that."

ple don't like that."

But some believe Allen carries it to unbearable extremes. Says another NFL executive: "George isolates himself from everybody, including his owner and other people in his own organization, He has a tendency to put himself and his team in a little execution." and his team in a little cocoon.

That is part of what Ailen and others mean when they say his next job will have to be "in the right place at the right time." If the second Ram experience taught one lesson, it was that he can't function effectively without total control of football operations. Steve Rosenbloom, the former vice president and general manager at New Orleans, indicates that his father had been alone in wanting to hire Allen in the first place.

"I wasn't averse to having George Allen as coach," Rosenbloom says, "but you had two there would be a collision. As it happened, it Was scomer."

Ed Hookstratten, then the Ram legal counsel (and who negotiated Allen's contract with the Redskins), says he thought the Rosenbloom-Allen alliance would succeed.

"I know C.R. later regretted the decision [to fire Allen]. He thought he should have kept him. At one point, he seriously considered rebiring him," Hookstratten said.

That, the lawyer says, was after Ray Malavasi's first season, when the current Ram Coach was hospitalized for an attack of high blood pressure. Hookstratten: "C.R. said, "I Ray is not going to be able to return to coaching. I'm going to get George back in here."

That may be as close as Allen has come to returning to coaching. He says that when Reeves fired him after the "70 season, he had five other offers" besides the Redskin job.

Now, it seems, they have all dried up — at least the ones tailored to his methods or compatible with his past. Allen once was tight with Redskin Owner Jack Kent Cooke, but when 'I haven't changed. I don't want to change. Those things are important to me because they're all part of winning. Some people don't like that.'

Cooke fired Jack Pardee recently he kept Bob Beathard as general manager and hired Joe Gibbs, a San Diego Charger aide, as coach. There was a falling out with Edward Bennett Williams, who was then running the Redskins, when Allen left Washington after the '77 season in a dispute over the 5-percent stock purchase option in his original contract.

But Hookstratten dismisses Allen's conflicts with three different managements as factors in strong personalities involved, each used to running his own ship. My premise was that it wouldn't be a happy marriage. Sooner or later the losing organizations they continually make the same mistake. Those owners think they can run the team and win just because they've been in the league a long time. The Giants or lets should hire George. He would mire those teams around in one year."

But one NFL executive says, "I couldn't see him with Wellington [Mara, the Giants' owner]. If I were picking a spot, it would be more like Green Bay, where you have a committee,

"I don't know where or when, but I think his day will come again," says Art Modell, owner of the Cleveland Browns.

Allen is ready. A friend says, "Nothing hap-pens in the National Football League that he doesn't know about."

At his spacious house overlooking Malaga Cove on the Palos Verdes Peninsula, his phone bill runs to more than $500 a month, He talks frequently to contacts around the league and gets press releases and statistics from every club. Through his CBS work, he has built a video-cassette library of game films. All that could be said for any hard-working TV analyst, but there's more but there's more.

He has files on coaches currently unemployed, trainers, equipment men, weight coaches, administrative coaches and college coaches he might want to interview, plus a file on pro assistant coaches he could approach should he have to organize a staff in a hurry.

Allen apparently is not hurring financially. Besides his CBS income ($60,000 a year), three-quarters of his $600,000 Ram salary is deferred. he has been paid only $50,000 each of the last three years and will receive $450,000 over the next 10.

So he is playing coy. He says he has not applied for any coaching jobs, "I would never do that. They knew where I am. I don't think I'm being blackballed. I just land it think the right situation has come along. There was one job recently where if I had agreed to terms, I probably would have been back at it. But there were other concessions.

"I can't accept a job when all my life I've proven that by having certain authority you can be successful. The teams that have won have been ones where the coach calls the shots. Coaching isn't just what takes place on Sunday. It's making decisions on who to keep and who

Evaluation Central

"Good coaches are also talent evaluators. and I'm not talking about just evaluating players, but equipment men, film men, switchboard operators, whatever.

"At Washington we had the earliest-opening switchboard in the league and the last to close. I used to try other clubs and they'd be closed at five minutes to 5. "And those clubs were in last place."

Coe Sets Record Of 1:46 for 800 The Associated Press

COSFORD, England -Sebastian Coe broke the world indoor record for the 800-meter run here Wednesday night with a clocking of 1 minute, 46 seconds, lowering by four-tenths of a second the record set by Italy's Carlo Grippo four years ago.

It was Coe's first indoor 800 since winning the European title in 1977. The victory came in an track and field meet between teams from Britain and East Germany; the East Germans won, 122-85.

After his performance, Coe, who holds the outdoor 800 record and is the Olympic 1,500-meter champion, said, "I didn't realize I was in this kind of shape," Andreas Busse of in the 800 with 1:47.1 while teammate Detlef Wagenknecht was third in 1:47.6.

NEW YORK -- The flower of American letters was invited to the Waldorf Wednesday to learn firsthand the answer to the question: What is an Ayub? Top Rank Inc., a fight promotion firm, seized the occasion to present an Ayub, specifically Ayub Kalule, the Ugandan Dane from Kampala via Copenhagen, whom the World Boxing Association re-gards as junior middleweight (154 pounds) champion of the world.

Kalule is going to fight the World Boxing Council wel-terweight champion, Sugar Ray Leonard, June 19 at a site not yet determined.

By that time, though, Ayub, discouraged by the boycott, had given up on the amateurs and was boxing professionally in Copenhagen. Mogens Palle, his manager, had persuaded him to move to Denmark, where junior middleweights have better employment opportunities than in Kampala. Accompanied by four Danish tive, Kalule and his manager flew into New York Monday. The newsmen wanted to interview Leonard immediately, but Irving Rudd of Top Rank told them Sugar Ray was traveling, "I don't want to be rude," Rudd said, "but he is. champion of the world and has many matters to attend to. He'll be at the press conference Wednes-day."

"I must remind you," Palle put in politely, "that for this fight Ayub is the champion and Ray Leonard the challenger. And," the manager added, "challenger he will remain after the fight."

The plane from Copenhagen was two bours late, but Kalule and his party sped through customs in five minutes. The customs inspector was a fight fan. "If he's going to fight Ray Leonard." he said, "he has trouble enough without any from me."

Dreamer's Progress

By Russell Baker NEW YORK - When I was 11 IN it was a very good year. I roamed the open city, carefree as a swallow and planned to rescue Miss Yaskell, who taught fifth grade, from pirate captivity. Afterward. Fiorello La Guardia would ride beside me in the ticker-tape parade up Broadway crying.

"How's he doing?" John Da-cey, who had blackened my eye in the schoolyard. self on the car to the parade and would throw himbeg forgiveness and I would stop whip him within an inch of his life.

was a very good year, except that Miss Yaskell never got captured by pirates and John Dacey caught me daydreaming in the park one day and punched my nose. When I was 17 it was an excellent year. I dreamed of taking the beauteous Betty Ballou to the senior prom in Uncle Don's Chevrolet coupe, but didn't learn to drive in time and had to take Caroline Swigget instead on the streetcar.

When I was 25 it was an extraordinary year. "You realize of course that you'll never make any money working for this company," said Earl McAdoo, the first tycoon I had ever mei. "but the experience will be invaluable."

"Money!" I cried. "Do you reckon me so unworthy that I can aspire to nothing more valuable than

When I was 29 it was a truly splendid year. "Have you found happiness yet?" asked Caroline Swigget as I took her home one night on the streetcar.

"Caroline," I said, "you want perfume and pearls. You will never find them with me." Yes, I had seen that happiness was a childish bauble, had learned that experience is worthless unless transmuted into art, had abandoned the steely-eyed McAdoo and committed myself to the creation of a novel that would leave Edmund Wilson flabbergasted.

When I was 33 it was an astonishing year. I took my completed novel to the notiest literary agency in New York. The Beauteous Betty Ballou Ten Percent Corp.. Ltd. Betty rode in limousines and her hair came undone in the wind tunnel created by the Time & Life

Building as she changed from her Cadillac to her Continental. "Your novel." she said, "must be a work of genius since I would be too embarrassed to show it to any publisher in town. Come see me when you've done something a little more Mickey Spillane."

When I was 44 it was an absolutely glorious year. I would take Caroline Swigget home on the streetear, and she would say, "If I get off and walk the last five blocks, maybe somebody will try to mug me and you can fulfill your childhood dream of heroism by rescuing me." And I would say, "Can it, Caroline. I'm 44 years

When I was 46 — "Marry me," she would say, "and fulfil your youthful dream of happiness." And I would say, "I have an embarrassing confession to make, Caroline. I still haven't learned to drive. I wouldn't be able to get you home with the groceries from the supermarket."

When I was 49 it was a very mediocre year. The last streetcar had been destroyed by the highway-and-bus lobby and Caroline had bought a car.

"If we got married," she would say, "I would let you practice driv-ing my car and you would fulfill your youthful ambition for experience." And I would say, "Caroline, Caroline. I'm 49 years old for God's sake." And Caroline drove out of my life. When I was 57 it was an absolutely breathtaking year. I would stand at the streetcar stops dreaming of the old days and Betty Ballou would ride by in limousines.

Once she came riding up Broadway in a ticker-tape parade, having just sold the rights to "The Duch-ess With the Mossy Sheets" for $16 million. I threw myself on her car to ask forgiveness. "Betty," I cried, "I was an idiot to hold out for fame beyond the grave. I'm 57 years old and I'm ready for the big bucks."

Betty stopped the parade and whipped me within an inch of my life while Mayor Koch cried, "How's she doing?"

New Light on Creatures That Glow

By Joseph Williams

New York Times Service

New YORK — Just as visitors fiving into New York tors flying into New York are often dazzled by the city's flickering lights on a clear night, so have scientists been fascinated and perplexed by the dim glows and multicolored lights produced by an enormous variety of ani-mals in forests, in caves and in the ocean depths.

From studies on the common lightning bugs captured by many a child on a warm summer night to the elusive "flashlight fish" of tropical waters, insect specialists, biochemists and other scientists have gained new insights into this light-producing ability, known as bioluminescence. furthering their understanding of animal and insect communication.

Oceans are the home for many of the world's luminous creatures, which use the trait in a variety of ways. For example, several species of shrimp can regulate their bioluminescence, depending on the water temperature and color, to disguise their predatortempting silhouettes.

Bacterial Light

A number of fish species in which bioluminescence is actually produced by bacteria housed in a specialized organ, rather than by the fish themselves, have caught the attention of Califor-nia researchers, including John E. McCosker, director of San Francisco's Steinhart Aquarium, Ed Miller, aquatic biologist at the aquarium, and Kenneth H. Nealson of the Scripps Institu-tion of Oceanography in La Jol-

At the aquarium recently, Miller showed a visitor a tank, lighted with a dim red bulb, in which a specimen of the Photo-blepharon, one of the genuses of "flashlight fish," darted furtively above and around rocks, frequently revealing its sinister-looking greenish light organs. Researchers have found that these fish are unusual in using their bioluminescence for communicative, defensive and offensive purposes. Miller said that in a typical encounter, the fish will flash its light organ, leaving an image momentarily imprinted on the retina of a predator's eye while the fish itself escapes. It is also believed that the bioluminescence is an evolutionary adapta-tion for nighttime foraging, when more food is available. The fish are quite photophobic, Miller pointed out, and a sign on the tank prohibits flash photographs, since the sudden shock can kill

For reasons not yet known, possibly because of a nutrient de-ficiency, the fish have a tendency to lose their lights in captivity. In the flashight fish, the bac-teria responsible for the light are stored in a pouchlike organ, and keeping their numbers at a level that the fish can support.

In a practical application of the research Nealson recently received a Navy grant to measure the amount and color of biolumiwants to see if bioluminescence could interfere with laser communications to submarines from satellites.

In organisms, light is generally produced in one of two ways: Two chemicals generically known as luciferin and luciferase

In South America, there is a railroad worm that has red lights in its head and green lights all along its back. They walk around with red lights on and when they are touched or stimulated they turn on the green lights.

researchers are keenly interested in the symbiosis between the fish and the bacteria. "The fish can't see without the bacteria and the bacteria can't live without the nourishment the fish provides," said McCosker,

It has proved difficult to culture the bacteria outside the flashlight fish because of their need for nutrients and, possibly, other unknown substances in the host fish. Cultures have been successful, however, with bacteria from several other fish, including the Japanese knightfish.

Much of Nealson's work in bioluminescence has focused on this species. In an interview, Nealson at Scripps said that the fish's light organs are highly evolved structures with an extensive vascular system. In addition, each fish species has a particular species of bacteria and a different means of regulating the bacteria's light output, mainly through the control of oxygen.

For the knightfish, Nealson has proposed a model in which the lish provides glucose to the bacteria, whose waste products are used by a group of cells in the light organ simultaneously with oxygen. This process regulates the amount of light produced by the bacteria, which glow better under low-oxygen conditions, and slows their reproduction, combine in the presence of a catalyst, usually oxygen. In the other system, a complex protein that contains luciferin and other chemicals reacts, or binds, with

At the University of Georgia in Athens, Milton J. Cormier has been studying a protein-type sys-tem in hydrozoan coelenterates, an animal group that includes jellyfish, to learn how the proteins link nerve signals to the oaset of Cormier said that he and his colleagues are developing meth-ods to use the proteins to moni-tor, with special detection equipment and computers, various cells' levels of calcium - an essential nutrient for many organisms, including humans.

Fireflies' lights are produced by a luciferin-luciferase reaction that uses oxygen and adenosine triphosphate, an energy-storing molecule found in most living cells; this reaction has found some medical use, including a heart disease test. A task confronting researchers is determin-ing whether other chemicals. such as proteins, are the chemical basis for various colors of firefly flashing. Fireflies, particularly their behavior, have been a prime interest of Prof. James E. Lloyd at the University of Florida at Gainesville. His 18 years of insect studies have included trips to swamps in Thailand and South American jungles.

Most fireflies, he pointed out. tend to be herbivorous, eating flowers or, in his lab, "a little piece of apple." However, the carnivorous females in the Photuris genus attract and devour males of other species by imitat-ing the other species' flash pat-terns. Photuris males have been found to copy the flashing of other species. This enables them to lure Photuris females, probably for mating.

Lloyd said that he observed a new aspect of Photuris behavior recently in southern Mexico: Photuris females eating craneflies, other beetles and possibly a mosquito, all of them aitracted to a sticky substance on brown flowering seeds of six-to seven-foot-tail grasses.

Color Variations

Research by William H. Bigg-ley of Johns Hopkins University, with Lloyd and others, is revealing the uses of wavelength, or color, differences in firefly flash-ing. Yellow-flashing fireflies tend to come out early in the evening. while the green flashers come out late at night. According to Bigg-ley this may be an evolutionary adaptation by which the firefly's visibility is maximized to other fireflies in different light condi-tions. "Pressure is intense for male fireflies to find and mate with females," he said, pointing out that a species would have "a distinct competitive advantage if the color differences aid mat-

Color is a factor in other species, as well. "In South America, there is a railroad worm that has red lights in its head and green lights all along its back," Lloyd added. "They walk around with red lights on and when they are touched or stimulated they turn on the green lights." He postulated that the red lights are used for vision and that the green lights are turned on when the worm is stimulated, possibly by a preda-

Lloyd said his main interest is the development of a general theory of insect and animal communication. As for fireflies, he said: "They're awfully nice animals and I like the time of night."
